

Dear Colleague,

Tennessee has the distinction of having the first fixed training facility designed specifically to train codes enforcement personnel.

Approximately 3,500 individuals are committed to codes enforcement across the state. They have responsibilities ranging from administration to inspection, encompassing city, county or state adopted codes, ordinances or laws. State law mandates that building and fire inspectors be state certified and meet continuing education requirements. The Academy's training curriculum, which has approval from the State Fire Marshal's office, has been designed to fulfill these requirements.

The Academy campus features state-of-the-art classrooms and interactive lab facilities with an assortment of building material testing equipment. The codes prop house supports the training need with functioning HVAC, plumbing and electrical components to present an extensive variety of training scenarios.

We look forward to your participation in this unique training experience.

Respectfully,

Denny J. Boss
